Problems in Small Animal Behavior:

Understanding and Preventing Canine Aggression

A One-Day Seminar for Everyone on Your Hospital Team

Sunday, April 15, 2012 • 9 AM - 3 PM • Embassy Suites SeaTac Airport

15920 West Valley Highway • Seattle (Tukwila), Washington - just off I-5 and I-405, near Southcenter Mall

Course Overview

There are frequently signs early in a dog's life that signal the development of aggressive behavior. If you know what to look for, and what to do when you see it, you can potentially prevent that cute little puppy from turning into Dogzilla! This seminar is designed to provide everyone in your hospital team with the tools to recognize and manage those early signs of canine aggression. And if aggression is already a problem by the time you first see a patient, you'll learn tips and techniques for managing that aggression, and how to take that "dog gone wrong"... and make them right again.

Seminar Topics

• "Can You Hear Me Now?": Interpreting Canine Communication

Growling, biting and other aggressive threats are a normal part of the canine communication repertoire. If a veterinary professional can recognize a potentially aggressive situation early in the interaction, they can then make appropriate changes in their actions and in the environment to prevent the dog from escalating its communication to the next level.

• "Don't Touch Me": Behavior Modification Techniques for Cage Protectors and Other Challenging Patients

It is important to remember that each interaction you have with a patient sets the tone for future interactions. Without proper management, a difficult-to-handle patient can become more difficult each time it enters the veterinary hospital. This session will focus on problem solving tools for modifying the behavior of these patients and improving your interaction with them.

• Puppies Gone Wrong... And Right Again

Frequently adult dogs are seen for aggression issues which can be easily prevented through client education. Learn why puppies can become aggressive, as well as the risks and warning signs for potential problems. Then we'll discuss treatment approaches that work, and ones that don't.

• Assessment of "Behavior Problem" Patients

How do you quickly and efficiently determine the issues a client is facing? When is a problem behavior truly a behavior disorder that requires an organized team approach?
